“A Look Into Current Voter Turnout in US Elections and How It Can Be Increased”

T 1088

National TSA Conference

TECHNOLOGY STUDENT ASSOCIATION

Introduction

The Issue: Voter turnout in the US is low compared to other developed nations.

The Data: This Study gathered quantitative and qualitative data from trusted sources and databases, including past US election turnout rates by state, region, and demographic factors, US electorate demographics, voting program info, and political engagement/trust metrics.

Purpose

This study aims to analyze the low voter turnout in US elections and suggest strategies to increase participation. The goal is to provide evidence-based recommendations for policies to increase future voter turnout. The study aims to comprehensively understand the factors causing low voter turnout and determine effective ways to address this issue.

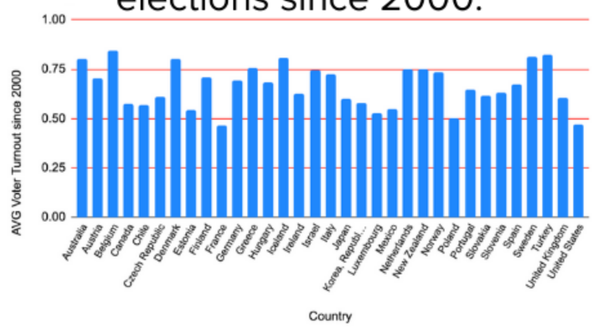
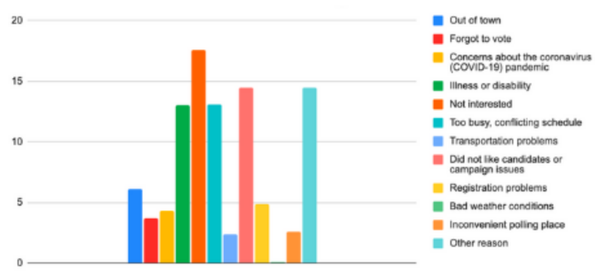
Results

The US has had the second lowest average voter turnout of OECD countries in parliamentary elections since 2000.



Reasons cited by non-voters for not participating in elections.



Many high turnouts countries make voting day a national holiday or hold weekend elections (red) rather than weekday elections.

26% of US states make voting day a holiday for state workers.

Methods

We collected data from trusted sources and databases, and we made our best efforts to verify information. This has enabled us to provide a well-informed analysis of the subject with high-quality data.

References

- Council on Foreign Relations
- International Institute for Democracy and Electoral Assistance (IDEA)
- Pew Research Center
- United States Census Bureau

Conclusion

Low voter turnout is a significant issue in the US. Making it easier for citizens to vote can help us to increase voter turnout.

Measures such as expanding early voting, allowing mail-in voting, making polling places more accessible, and making Election Day a national holiday can help achieve this goal.

Increasing turnout would ensure a more diverse and representative group of individuals participate in elections and strengthen our democracy.

Next Steps

- Investigate reasons for disparities in turnout among different demographic groups.
- Conduct research on ensuring the security of elections.
- Voice support for policies that make voting more accessible.
- Encourage others to vote and provide necessary information.
- Promote a culture of civic engagement and participation.